Dear Keith.

Your series of films, Embrace of Aging: Men's Perspective, Embrace of Aging: Women's Perspective and Embrace of Dying are trailblazing works. Your documentaries explore the most challenging but natural part of life, highlighting the journey towards end of life. I appreciated viewing Embrace of Aging: Men's Perspective and the other two films' trailers. I feel that all three are thought provoking and right on target for what we should be addressing at this critical juncture in time. As we discussed, the baby boomers are aging but not necessarily gracefully.

Now more than ever, our culture is devoted to the lengthening of life and the enhancement of our quality of life. Yet we have few answers for the growing numbers who want help and guidance as they navigate that journey. I am very excited to see you unfold the core issues and concerns and document diverse responses that offer encouragement and resolution for many of the questions raised.

I am "all in". Count on me and call upon the entire Jewish Hospice and Chaplaincy Network to be collaborators, resources and friends for this project. We will be looking for every opportunity to disseminate and promote your work. We will be proud to associate ourselves with the embracing trilogy and to "brand" our organization with your evocative message(s).

I look forward to "embracing" your mission and working closely with you in the future.

Best wishes,

Rabbi E.B. (Bunny) Freedman

Dear Mr. Famie:

Your series of films, Embrace of Aging: Men's Perspective, Embrace of Aging: Women's Perspective, and Embrace of Dying, are groundbreaking work. Aging and death are taboo subjects in America. Our culture ignores the inevitability of biology, viewing aging and death as optional experiences. This cultural blind-spot is bumping up against the sliver tsunami of the impending baby boomers that come to the aging and dying experience unprepared.

The last film in the series, the Embrace of Dying, is an important film that will explore the taboo subject of death and dying. There is a labor coming into the world and a labor in leaving. We know much more about the labor of birthing than the physical, emotional, social, and spiritual labor of leaving our earthly home. Individuals, families, friends, and even health care professionals approach this time with denial, apprehension, and misconceptions leading to unnecessary suffering.

By 2030, America and, in fact the entire world, will have more elderly than has existed in all of human history. We can wear house the elderly out of sight (which will be us baby boomers) in 800 bed institutions, or begin to have constructive dialogue on how to make this last great journey and final act of life meaningful for all touched by the end-of-life experience.

As the President and CEO of Hospice of Michigan, called the "Harvard of Hospice" in the nation, I have witnessed how embracing and facing the end-of-life without denial of its existence can allow for great joy, making amends, saying goodbye, and miracles of emotional and spiritual healing for patients and their loved ones even while the body is failing.

For all the reasons stated above, I am passionately in support of the Embrace of Dying film and fully committed to contributing creatively and financially to this "labor of love." I look forward to working with you as you bring a full, robust exploration of the history, physical, emotional, social, and spiritual issues at the end-of-life to film.

With sincere appreciation,

Dear Mr. Famie:

It was a pleasure to meet you and learn more about your Embrace of Aging films. I am particularly excited about your new film that will focus on "Embracing Death"! Although a difficult subject to address with patients, it is an important one, as important as dealing with their disease. Because of the fears and taboos that are associated with it, it is often whispered and discussed among physicians in hushed tones, instead of discussing it openly and honestly. This taboo surrounding death often leaves the patient alone, scared, terrified about the process, and fearing abandonment in one of the most critical places in their life. I believe this documentary, "Embracing Death," is much needed and will be a much discussed piece of work. I am in full support of this film and will offer my support and guidance throughout this creative process. Your interest in following the course of a young cancer patient with a lethal heart tumor will be a very reflective and poignant view on this difficult subject. I believe this will add an added aspect of this project not yet explored in other projects, as death is a journey and a process. I look forward to working with you on this project!

Sincerely,
